VETERAN BEE-RAISER OUTDONE BY A TOAD

spends much time working around hi mey-makers, discovered a large toad in front of one of the hives, and as the binsy bees went in and out his toadship would occasionally devour one of them. The diet of bees had given the toad a fat, sleek appearance, and Smith concluded that to protect the bees he would have to get rid of the pest. Being tender-hearted, he could not bear to kill have to get rid of the pest. Being tender-hearted, he could not bear to kill the bee-eater, so put it in a paper sack and carried it to the river and carefully a deposited it close to the water's edge and went back to his home well satisfied at getting rid of the critter so handily. Imagine his surprise a day or two later to find the same old toad in its accustomed place in front of the hives of origins itself with the toothsome busy little workers. Smith decided to give the toad one more chance to reform, so it he again put the toad into a sack and carried it across the river. Up to to-day it had not returned.
